Recognizing the fact that too much of live online sessions are tiring for the students [during the COVID-19 phase], we have done a couple of things. One is, we have created an asynchronous content which is pre-recorded and made available to students which the students can access at their own pace. But then [we] also give them deadlines to watch the video. So, some of the content is pre-recorded and majority of it, that is 80 percent, is online right now. So the split between synchronous and asynchronous content is something that we have introduced this year and it is a part of our PGP-2.2. We have rolled this out this year and this model is going to be there. Recording of the live sessions are also going to be there for the students. Many a times students miss the live sessions because of the power and network related issues. So, we don't want them to miss that. Live pre-recorded sessions are made available for these students.
